

Stefano Sacchi is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Milan, where he teaches Comparative Political Economy; Adjunct Professor at LUISS University in Rome, where he teaches Welfare and Labor Policy; President of the new Italian National Institute of Public Policy Analysis, INAPP, and a policy adviser to the Italian Prime Minister's office. He has authored or co-authored more than fifty academic publications in the field of social and labor policy, and was visiting scholar or lectured in several universities worldwide, including Cornell, Princeton, Toronto, NYU, University of Washington, Tokyo University and Waseda. In his former capacity as the special adviser to the Italian Labor Minister, he designed and drafted the reforms of Italian unemployment benefits and short-time work in the context of Italy's 2015 labor market reform (so-called Jobs Act).